Orange Business Services appoints country manager for South Africa to drive company growth

Orange Business Services has appointed Yannick Decaux as country manager for South Africa and sales director for Sub-Saharan Africa. He will be based in Johannesburg and is charged with driving the next phase of the company's growth strategy within the Sub-Saharan region. He will also serve as director of the Board of Orange Business South Africa.

"Orange Business Services' aggressive focus in Sub-Saharan Africa is in line with our Conquests 2015 objective to be the leader in the world's high-growth markets," said Yannick Decaux. "The region's economic potential is at its highest in generations, we will continue to invest in high speed networks, in innovative IT solutions and in our people to support the needs of our multinational customers which operate in Africa and engage strategically with the African companies to help them grow in the global markets."

Orange Business Services has had a presence on the African continent since 1949 and is established in 40 African countries, with a business-to-business base of more than 3,750 multinational companies. It remains the only strong geographical player and supports growth across the region with the world's largest data and voice network to deliver connectivity and IT services to multinational corporations in all verticals, including mining, oil and gas, finance, and government. More than 1,750 people are employed across the continent to provide localized service. Orange Business Services has major service centers in Egypt and Mauritius and its South African headquarters is in Johannesburg.

Decaux has had a 17-year career in the Orange Group with experience spanning several sales and management roles, including eight years spent in the U.S. In his previous role, Decaux served as Deputy Head and General Manager based in Paris for the business unit that supports Orange Business Services' largest customer SITA, the specialist in air transport communications and IT solutions. Prior to this, he was based in New York City as an Account Director for one of Orange Business Services' largest U.S.-based global customers.

Decaux holds an Engineer's Degree in Telecommunications from Télécom Lille, one of France's most high profile engineering schools.
